

Centre for Reproductive Education & Specialist Training (CREST)

CREST is the first specialised training centre in Asia Pacific for Assisted Reproductive Techniques of its kind, to enhance the skills of clinicians, embryologists, nurses and administrators from around the region.

Located at the National University Hospital, Singapore (NUH) and founded by Professor PC Wong, Head of Reproductive Endocrinology & Infertility, CREST offers a unique combination of theory and practical hands-on learning opportunities within its purpose-built training site at NUH. Four state-of-the-art laboratories showcasing the latest equipment for effective ART procedures, together with a low student-teacher ratio, both maximise and encourage learning and growth opportunities. The unique real life, real learning approach will enable practitioners to immediately apply newly acquired skills.

An overview of the ART Course for Clinicians

This course covers all aspects of an IVF cycle, from pretreatment evaluation and testing, through the entire treatment path, and into planning for future cycles. It also explores the ethical and economical implications for treatment today. Our trainees will have the unique opportunity to observe various treatment procedures for ultrasound scans, oocyte recovery and embryo transfer.

An overview of the ART Course for Embryologists

The 4-week course covers all aspects of the ART laboratory, including the set-up and running of the lab, specific procedures and quality control to ensure the highest possible success rates in an IVF programme. Offering each trainee a complete hands-on learning opportunity, the classes are conducted in the training laboratories equipped with an integrated murine system and the latest equipment for effective ART procedures. Faculty will work individually with trainees throughout the course, providing a total overview and continuous assessment.
